CARL HAGENBECK IS DEAD IN HAMBURG

Trainer of Wild Animals and Owner of Stellingen Zoological Park.

FATHER GAVE HIM A START

Hagenbeck's Hardest Job Was Training His Nervous Brother-in-law.

Special Cable Despatch to THE SES. HAMBURG, April 14.—Carl Hagenbeck, the well known dealer and trainer of wild animals, is dead at the age of 69. He was the initiator of the plan for enclosing captive wild beats in quasinatural surroundings like those of the bears and other animals in the Bronx Park Zoo in New York, instead of keeping them in cages. He owned the famous zoological park at Stellingen, near this city, and had the largest animal business in the world.

Carl Hagenbeck was the most celebrated collector and trainer of wild animals. He was often called the Barnum of Germany, but the characterization failed to do justice to his originality and ability. His menageries were famed throughout England. France, Germany, Russia and this country. In Hamburg he maintained an immense private zoological garden where, partly for profit and partly for pleasure, he assembled and trained costly collections of wild beasts. Whenever animal exhibitors anywhere in the world wanted the finest and best trained of wild animals they cabledto Hagenbeck. He was born in 1844. In 1848 his father purchased some seals and a Polar bear that had been brought to Hamburg by a whaler. The elder Hagenbeck became interested in the possibilities of the business and subsequently acquired other wild animals. At the age of 21 the whole collection was given to Carl Hagenbeck, and before 1873 he had so extended the business that he had to erect in Hamburg large buildings in which to house his animals. He spent great sums of money in equipping expeditions which he sent to Asia, Africa, South America, wherever to be found—and which returned to Hamburg with the animals that Hagenbeck trained and distributed to dealers all over the world.

In 1875 he began to house a collection of the representative animals of many countries, accompanied by troupes of Hagenbeck's fame in this country was Hagenbeck's fame in this country was enormously increased by his success as an exhibitor of wild animals at the Chicago World's Fair. The Hagenbeck menageric and circus was one of the great sights of the Midway. Later he became interested in permanent exhibitions in this country and bought an interest in circus enterprises. He was a large est in circus enterprises. He was a large stockholder in the Hagenbeck & Wallace circus, which, in winter quarters at Peru, Ind., was practically wiped out by the recent floods that brought calamity to recent floods that brought calamity to Indiana.

Hagenbeck's belief was that a trainer could accomplish wonders by treating his animals kindly. He said years ago to a reporter for THE SUN:

"You can do nothing with animals except by kindness. In order to have patience with animals you must have faith in them and confidence in yourself. Kindness will always rule an animal."
